

Timothy Rees

Following university, Tim spent three years working in the private sector in Dubai, UAE and the south of the UK before joining the army. In 2008 he attended the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst, the British Army's internationally recognised prestigious leadership and management course. On successful completion, he commissioned as an officer into the Intelligence Corps.

Over the course of his seven-year career, the last three with UK Special Forces, he operated, briefed and advised in the Americas, Europe, Africa, Middle East and Asia. In this time, he observed and adapted to the various nuances of leadership in differing cultures, as well as between government, military and private sectors.

On leaving the military, Tim brought together valuable experiences from both the public, private and military sectors. He is now independently contracted by both government and commercial organisations across three continents for his expertise in intelligence, analysis, strategic communications, and leadership and management.